55" J-Curved OLED monitor in focus

Munich, 19 February 2025

The full-service display specialist DATA MODUL will once again be bringing its popular, inhouse developed game 'PixelPuck' to the exhibition booth in Nuremberg. In contrast to last year, this time visitors will be able to test their skills on a high-resolution 55" UHD OLED curved monitor. The display offers a resolution of 3840 x 2160, a contrast ratio of 135,000:1 and brightness values of 450 cd/m<sup>2</sup>. The cover glass has a thickness of 5 mm, glare and the bending radius of this exhibit is R1500 in J-shape format.

At just 24 kg, the ultra-thin panel is approx. 10 kg lighter than conventional 55" J-Curved LCD monitors. The OLED display has a service life of approx. 30,000 hours, which is similar to that of LCDs. The monitor is available in J/P/C formats and up to a bending radius of R1000; convex/concave solutions are also possible.

From 11 March to 13 March, visitors to the DATA MODUL booth will be able to try out PixelPuck 2.0 – a revised version of the game that caused such a stir last year. Thanks to new design elements and effects, it's worth a visit for everyone – whether you're new to PixelPuck or an experienced player.

The intuitive gameplay is reminiscent of air hockey and combines quick reactions with technological skill. The aim is to playfully master challenges and beat the high score. Plug and play at its best.
